Document 1: WO 01/42186 A1

Commentary:

Document 1 cited in the international search report does not describe the inventions of claims 1-11, and therefore these inventions are novel.

Document 1 states that an oxy group or hydroxy group and an alkynyl group can be substituted at position 17 of estrone derivatives, and that these compounds have estrogen activity and anti-estrogen activity (see Claims; Reaction Schemes 9 and 10, etc.). Persons skilled in the art can easily select these substituents. In addition, although the Specification of this application compares the pharmacological effect of the inventive compounds with the compounds described in document 1, only a very small number of compounds are compared, and this examination finds that the inventions of claims 1-11 do not provide a particularly outstanding effect throughout the claims as a whole. As a result, the inventions of claims 1-11 can easily be obtained by persons skilled in the art based on the inventions described in document 1, and they lack an inventive step.
